OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Admiral Stansfield Turner
Director
Central Intelligence Agency
Washington, D.C. 20505

Dear Admiral Turner:

I am grateful to you for the opportunity you gave me last Friday to gain an insight into the organization and operation of the Central Intelligence Agency and to discuss with you and your colleagues how the intelligence community and the academic community might appropriately relate to each other. I was particularly impressed with how much of your operation resembles the academic community--the well trained research specialists, the emphasis upon scholarship, and the excellent library. I came away confident that there are fitting ways by which the scholarly resources of both the campus and the Agency could be made available to each other with mutual benefit and without compromising the interests of each.

I came away also reassured about the competency of you and your colleagues and the indispensable mission of the Agency in these difficult times for our country.

Sincerely yours,

Henry King Stanford
President
